EMDR Training

The Eye Movement Desensitization Reprocessing (EMDR) is an integrative form of psychotherapy which contains elements from a wide range of approaches (e.g. dynamic, CBT, hypnosis, mind-body) in combination with bilateral stimulation (visual, tactile or auditory) thus bringing about an accelerated process of information that was dysfunctionally stored in the brain.

The workshop is composed of two and a half days. On the first half day (introductory lecture) the lecture focuses on the theoretical and research background of EMDR and on the outline of the eight phases of the EMDR protocol. The participants will also watch a video and go through a brief experience of the method.

The next two days will include lectures, videos, and demonstrations during the mornings, and small group clinical practicum in the afternoons where participants will go through the experience of being an EMDR therapist and client (participants will have to agree to participate in the practicum).

The lectures will include a full description of the eight phases of the EMDR protocol, and further information about the use of EMDR in different clinical situations.

During the practicum the large group will be divided into groups of nine participants each. Each group will have its own facilitator. All trainers and facilitators have been trained and accredited by the EMDR Institute.

After Level I, trained participants will be able to use EMDR with 80% of client issues. Level II is needed to deal with clients who may disassociate or have other more serious problems.
